2 次の英文を読んで、設問に答えよ。[各2点]

(1) We live in a society that takes sickness for granted and looks upon health as lucky or exceptional. There are family doctors by the thousands all over the Western world who practice medicine by prescribing pills and drugs. Doctors (and dentists) are experts on sickness. Only a minority are practitioners of health. Early in their history the Chinese are reported ( 2 ) doctors their regular fees ( 3 ) people remained well. If and when a person became ill, the medical fees stopped until the patient was restored to health.

We, in the West, follow the opposite practice. We pay our ( 4 ) when we get sick and continue ( 5 ) them while we remain sick. The longer and the more serious the sickness, (6) [①fees ②the longer ③are paid ④the medical]. The lesson of such a situation is obvious. If the doctor is paid when his clients are sick, the more often they are sick, the more often the doctor will get a fee. Equally, the longer the sickness lasts and the more often the doctor is called in, ( 7 ) the income of the doctor.

Doctors often object to this reasoning. ( 8 ), economic forces are potent factors in any society. Doctors, dentists and druggists and their families buy their groceries and pay their rent and taxes out of the money ( 9 ) by people who are in need of their services.

We cannot forget the story of a lady who woke up one morning with a red blotch on her cheek. Much disturbed, she called up her family doctor and made an appointment to see him. The doctor looked carefully at the blotch and shook his head. "Is it that serious, doctor?" the lady questioned anxiously. "Rather serious, Madam," answered the doctor. "(10) If you had waited for an hour or two before coming, the spot would have disappeared and I would have lost my fee." Not all doctors are so frank.

(注) prescribe: (薬など)の処方を書く                          practitioner: (弁護士・開業医などの実務の)専門家
 blotch: できもの
